A mathematics professor specializing in CHOAS theory has found a way to predict the movement of the U.S. stock market. A stockbroker-turned-money manager employs the technique to manage millions of dollars for an America-based trust fund. The trust fund—with holdings now in the billions of dollars—was established in the 19th Century by Tsar Alexander II of Russia. The Russians had forgotten the trust, but now want the money. A Moscow mafya family learns of the technique and wants to steal it. Conflict among the Russians, the mafya, and the stockbroker arises. No everyone involved survives the decision.
