I Will Not Leave You Comfortless: Letters To My Daughter On Mother's Day P.K. Hamelton

This is a very short collection of loving, regretful letters from a deceased mother to her still living daughter on Mother's Day over the course of three years (each letter is written on Mother's Day). The mother writes from the grave and/or from her ashes. A few sections are written in Caribbean dialect and they are translated in the footnotes for the convenience of the reader, though readers who understand English should be able to pick up what is being said fairly easily. These letters may help daughters or anyone who has had a difficult relationship with their mother due to a history of generational trauma and abuse. P.K. Hamelton is a Caribbean-American author and a lawyer with Barbadian (Bajan) ancestry and resides in the United States.
