Not illustrated. 1892 Excerpt: ... Scarce the old and wizen houses had their doors and windows shut. Ah! it dwelt within the twilight as the worm within the nut. "Waken, waken, sleepy fishers; no hour is this for sleep," Cries a voice at roaring midnight beside the moonless deep. Half dizzy with the lightning there runs a gathering band--; Watcher, wherefore have ye called us?" Eyes go after his lean hand, And the fisher men and women from the dripping harbour wall See the darkness slow disgorging a vessel blind with squall. "Bring the ropes now! Stand ye by now! See, she rounds the harbour clear. God! they're mad to fly such canvas!" Ah! what bell-notes do they hear? Say what ringer rings at midnight; for, in the belfry high, Slow the chapel bell is tolling as though the dead passed by. Round she comes in stays before them; cease the winds, and on their poles Cease the sails their flapping uproar, and the hull no longer rolls. Now a scream from all those fishers, for there on deck there be All the drowned that ever were drowned from that village by the sea; And the. ghastly ghost-flames glimmer all along the taffrail rails On the drowned men's hands and faces, on the spars and on the sails. Hush'd the fishers, till a mother calls by name her drowned son; Then each wife and maid and mother calls by name some drowned one. Stands each grey and silent phantom on the same regardless spot--Joys and fears in their grey faces that the live earth knoweth not; Down the vapours fall and hide them from the children of a day, And the winds come down and blow them with the vapours far away. Hang the mist-threads for a little while like cobwebs in the air; Then the stars grow out of heaven with their countenances fair. "Pray for the souls in purgatory," the pale priest ...
